

the no-stress guide to finding great child care

No one can take your place, but pinpointing the perfect day care or sitter will ease the stress of leaving your little one. Take a deep breath—we've got you covered.

hen I started poring through recommendations in search of a nanny for my daughter, now 2, I balked when parents effused, "We love Karen so much, she's part of our family!" I could understand trusting, even adoring a caretaker, but in the thick haze of new parenthood, I had a hard time accepting that any mom could feel so bonded with a "glorified babysitter." Basically, I didn't want to accept that my baby was about to be handed off to a relative stranger.

Had I opened my eyes, I would have seen what I now know: There are plenty of loving, gifted caregivers out there who consider watching kids to be their calling—not just a job. Our nanny, Laura, has become an important figure in my daughter's life. And once you strike gold with your own sitter or day care, you'll be amazed at how confident you can feel waving bye-bye to your bub in the morning, too. Here it is: Your step-bystep, all-inclusive handbook for finding child care you (and baby!) will love.

WHAT KIND OF COVERAGE DO YOU NEED?

First things first: Use our comparison chart to gauge what best suits your new family.

day care nanny TAKE STOCK OF Are your hours erratic, or do If your workday rarely YOUR SCHEDULE you travel frequently? If so, "a wavers, consider a child nanny who can flex with your care facility. You'll be able to needs might be best," says meet the drop-off and Julie McCaffrey, owner of pickup times, and with the BabyNav, a maternity exception of holidays, a concierge company in nursery will be open (it Westchester County, N.Y., won't call in sick)! and mom of three. If your bambino tends to thrive CONSIDER YOUR Centers give your tot the KIDDO'S in a familiar setting, bringing chance to interact with PERSONALITY someone (with undivided other children in her age attention) into your home group. Yes, caregivers are might work better than placing typically keeping tabs on your tot in foreign territory. one to three babes (or one to four toddlers) at once, but that still tends to be ample supervision. CRUNCH THE Nannies' rates depend on where you live, their level of education and experience and how you find them. According to UrbanSitter, a website that helps care providers and families find each other, average hourly rates for a single kid range from $10.84 ($22,464 annually, assuming 40 hours per week) in Denver to $15.34 ($31,907 a year) in New York City.

NUMBERS

Full-time day care for an infant costs anywhere from $4,600 to $15,000 per year, depending on where you live, according to a report from Child Care Aware of America, an organization that helps families find quality providers. Look a few years ahead, too: Enrolling Baby No. 2 could double the price of a facility.

7 FRESH WAYS TO FIND A SITTER

You've hit up your co-workers for whomever watched their kids and considered stealing your best friend's super-nanny (she'd forgive you eventually, right?), but the perfect caregiver for your mini-me may be waiting where you'd least expect him or her.

"Tap the swim coaches or lifeguards at your local pool," says Betsy Lavin, a mom of three in Williamsburg, Va. "They know vour kids, CPR and first aid!"

Ask a stay-athome mom. She might be interested in company for her kid and earning some extra cash.

Ask around at church or temple, where members likely share your values.

Hobnob with nannies at the park. They often have friends or family members who are looking.

Contact your school district's PTA to see if a retired teacher is available.

Inquire with grad studentsthey're smart, driven and looking for ways to fund their schooling.

Request to join a closed Facebook group for local parents. If the group's leader reaches out, that's a good sign. "Moderators often do a mini-check to make sure you are who you say you are," says Beth O'Keefe, a mom of two in Chicago. That way you know sitter recs are legit, even if they're from strangers. Bonus: You may find a mom up for a nanny share to help save cash.

NANNIES BY THE NUMBERS

live outside the employer's home

get paid for days the employer doesn't need them

get paid vacation

compensated for their commute to and from work

vet with these smart steps

Exactly how to tell who's worthy of watching your kid

SCHEDULE A PHONE INTERVIEW

Nanny or day care, the first step to filter your prospects is the same: Pick up the phone. Is this person or place available at the right hours? If you'll need kids shuttled, does the nanny have a driver's license? Is he or she experienced with all ages? "I had an amazing baby whisperer, but months later when it came to dealing with a willful little boy, she was not great at setting limits," says Rebecca Parlakian, director of parenting resources at Zero to Three, a nonprofit that supports healthy child development. "We had to find someone else, and it was difficult." Finally, ask about credentials, but don't go crazy: Your candidate needs certification in infant CPR and first aid, not a master's in child psychology or, you know, baby yoga expertise.

GOING WITH A NANNY? ARRANGE INPERSON MEETINGS

Size up the dynamic. Your prospective caregiver should want to hold your kiddo and get involved. "During one interview, the candidate didn't try to

"During one interview, the candidate didn't try to connect with my child at all," says Carla Rogers, a mom of two in Portland, Ore. "Not wanting to pick up or play with my son showed that she wasn't making an effort to bond with him." Primo applicants look at home with your baby (making eye contact, not handling him like delicate china). "To feel safe, every baby needs to be able to attach to their caregiver in a meaningful way," Parlakian adds.

Ask the right questions. Broad questions like,

"How lucky do you consider yourself?" uncover his or her attitude toward life. (You want someone who feels fortunate, since that's a perspective that attracts positivity.) Inquire about the nanny's philosophy on feeding, sleeping and discipline, too. "It's best for her to be in a middle ground—nothing rigid or extreme," McCaffrey says. Don't be afraid to give a little pop quiz (e.g., "How do you know when a baby is hungry?") "That will reveal how skilled the person is at reading babies' cues," Parlakian says.

Observe her in action.

If possible, try to get a peek at your prospective nanny watching other kids. "When I visited home-based day cares, I could tell if the people who ran them enjoyed providing care, or if it was just what they did because they needed the job," says Kristina Slaney, a mom of two in Bothell, Wash. If you suspect your choice is more psyched about a paycheck than playtime, it's time to hit the "skip" button and move on.

DECIDED ON DAY CARE?

GO FOR TOURS

Obey your gut. Day care settings can vary from a multi-room facility to a small group of tots in the provider's house. Assuming the spot is state-licensed, it really comes down to personal preference. "The minute I got pregnant, I called to get on the waitlist for the highly recommended day care on-site where I worked," Slaney says. It took a year, but the staff called her with a spot for her 3-month-old right as her maternity leave was ending. Then she went for a visit. "Something in my soul said it wasn't right," she recalls. She scrambled to tour several other options and ended up choosing a warm, loving home-based day care that she found on Craigslist (and fully vetted, of course!). "You feel like you're going to an auntie's house with a bunch of your friends," she says.

Ask the right questions. When a day care is giving you a "yes" vibe, ask if their policy is to assign one person on staff as the primary caregiver for each child; this set-up facilitates the attachment that's so important. Also inquire about how employees handle sleeping and feeding. Until your baby is 6 to 9 months, you'll want the care provider to bend to your bub's needs, rather than sticking to an ironclad facility-wide schedule. Also, ask how sitters communicate with parents about what's happening (Rogers loves the Tumblr her day care updates throughout the day), especially if the staff turns over before you pick up in the evening.

Do a safety check. Go with your husband, partner or a friend, as an extra pair of eyes: "One place had an electrical outlet at kid level that was missing its cover," O'Keefe says. "I'm not talking about baby-proof plug covers—I mean the regular cover that screws into the wall!" Pass.

From teething...

Boltz Orajel Naturals Techning Pola Reile Technin

Trusted, benzocaine-free relief in Tablets and Gel
Now available in a nighttime gel formula to training...

Fluoride-free cleansers
 Gentle care for first teeth and gums

LOOK OUT FOR THESE RED FLAGS

When you're speaking to a day care staffer or potential nanny, certain phrases and attitudes should inspire an automatic "Next!" and send you dashing to a better candidate. Here are the warning signs to watch for when you're vetting contenders.

► A VAGUE RECOMMENDATION LETTER

If the letter's author doesn't explain why the nanny is available, she could just be trying to off-load a not-sogreat care provider. "I generally want to see, 'We're moving,' or 'I now need only two days a week," BabyNav's

McCaffrey says. If you're looking at a day care, note if and how the venue responds to negative comments (say, on Yelp); staffers should be pleasant and show concern in addressing a critique.

DISCOMFORT WITH YOU DROPPING BY

"Ask a candidate, 'Is it cool if I work from home some days?" McCaffrey suggests. "She should say, 'Yes, absolutely.' You want to make sure the nanny is doing her job well whether you're there or not." For centers, ask if they'd mind if a parent had to stop by midday.

AN AVERSION TO THE "S" WORD

"Avoid caretakers who talk about not wanting to 'spoil' babies," says Zero to Three's Parlakian. "You can't spoil an infant. If he or she is crying, there's a need that's not being met."

SKIRTING Q'S ABOUT PAST EMPLOYERS

Nannies who can't tell you stories about families they've worked for, or who won't open up about some of the challenges they've faced in past jobs, might be hiding something.

AN OVERLY SUNNY VIEW

"I had one client whose nanny would say every day that it had been a great day," McCaffrey says. After some digging, the parents realized the sitter wasn't giving them an honest take. Ask candidates to characterize the ups and downs of life with a little one. "When you have a small baby, not every day is perfect," McCaffrey says. "You want someone who's going to give you the real story."

to brushing...

· Kids' favorite characters

· Fluoride and fluoride-free toothpastes

Orajel™ is the #1 pediatrician recommended brand for infants and toddlers, with a full line of safe and effective products for every phase of your child's oral care development.

Orajel EXPERT CARE FOR LITTLE TEETH AND GUMS

baby basics

setting up a fair work relationship

Repeat after us: You're the boss. This means striking a balance between ensuring that your nanny feels happy and respected, and maintaining your authority so it's clear who makes the rules for this engagement (and for your baby). These tips will help you accomplish just that.

BE TRANSPARENT ABOUT HOUSEHOLD CHORES

Some light tidying up is totally fine, but don't expect anything extensive for the first year or two. (That baby is timeconsuming, remember?)

PUT EVERYTHING IN WRITING

Aside from getting all parties on the same page at the outset, a contract will protect everyone involved should something go wrong. Care.com offers a sample template that you can follow.

SET CLEAR EXPECTATIONS

This is the biggest thing care providers want from their bosses, says Melissa Marchwick, executive vice president at Sittercity, an online database of caregivers. "They like working for parents who understand the scope of the job and take the time to walk them through expectations and things they need to know about little Johnny," she explains. So lay it all out there, but then let her do her thing. Having your sitter record food intake? A-OK. Making her write down every single board book they read? Don't go there.

PROVIDE FEEDBACK

Set up a sit-down at the two-week mark to talk about any issues or concerns so you can ensure it's a good fit for the long haul.

FIT PREGNANCY (ISSN 01079-3615) is published 6 times a year, February/March, April/May, June/July, August/Septem-ber, October/November and December/January, by Weider Publications, LLC, a division of American Media, Inc., 4 New York Plaza, 4th Floor, New York, NY 10004. Copyright © Weider Publications, LLC, 2014. All rights reserved. Canada Post International Publications Mail Sale Agreement Number 40028566. Canadian B.N. 89579 2885RT. To the authors, photographers and people featured in this book: All materials, articles, reports and photographs published in this book are the exclusive property of Weider Publications, LLC and cannot be used without permission in writing. All materials submitted without restrictions become the sole property of Weider Publications, LLC and shall constitute a grant to Weider Publications, LLC to use name, likeness, story, and all other information submitted and the story of the person submitting the same for any and all purposes. FIT PREGNANCY is not responsible for returning unsolicited manuscripts, photographs, letters or other materials. Weider Publications, LLC and American Media, publisher of FIT PREGNANCY, do not promote or endorse any of the products or services advertised by third-party advertisers in this publication. Nor do Weider Publications, LLC or American Media Inc. verify the accuracy of any claims made in conjunction with such advertisements. Copyrighted under the Universal Copyright Convention and International Copyright Convention. Copyright reserved under the Pan-American Copyright Convention. Todos derechos reservados segun la Convención Pan Americana de Propriedad Literaria Artística. Title trademark registered in U.S. Patent Office. Subscription rate is $17.97 for (1 year) six issues in U.S.A. In Canada (1 year) 6 issues $24.97. Orders outside of U.S.A. and Canada (1 year) 6 issues $24.97. U.S. Orders outside of U.S.A. must be prepaid in U.S. funds. For customer service and back issues, call toll-free (800) 967-2084 or write to FIT PREGNANCY, P.O. Box 37207, Boone, IA, 50037-0207. SUBSCRIBERS: If the postal service alerts us that your magazine is undeliverable, we have no further obligation unless we receive a corrected address within one year. CANADA POSTMASTER: Send address changes to: American Media Inc., P.O. Box 907 STN Main, Markhan, ON L3P 0A7, Canada. From time to time we make our subscriber list available to companies who sell goods and services by mail that we believe would interest our readers. If you would rather not receive such mailings, please send your current mailing label to: FIT PREGNANCY, P.O. Box 37207, Boone, IA, 50037-0207. PRINTED IN U.S.A.

